DIGITAL STRATEGY

Now let us touch a little bit on why we need digital strategy to ensure our plans are successful

WHY A DIGITAL INFORMATION STRATEGY?

In the context of the rapidly-changing information environment, present activity is:

- Disjointed, uncoordinated
- Comparatively weak in scale of results
- Under-resourced
- Incapable of preserving what we create
- Inconsistent across provinces
- Unremarkable when compared to other best practices
- Not contributing substantially to global digital information research and development

WHY A DIGITAL STRATEGY NOW?

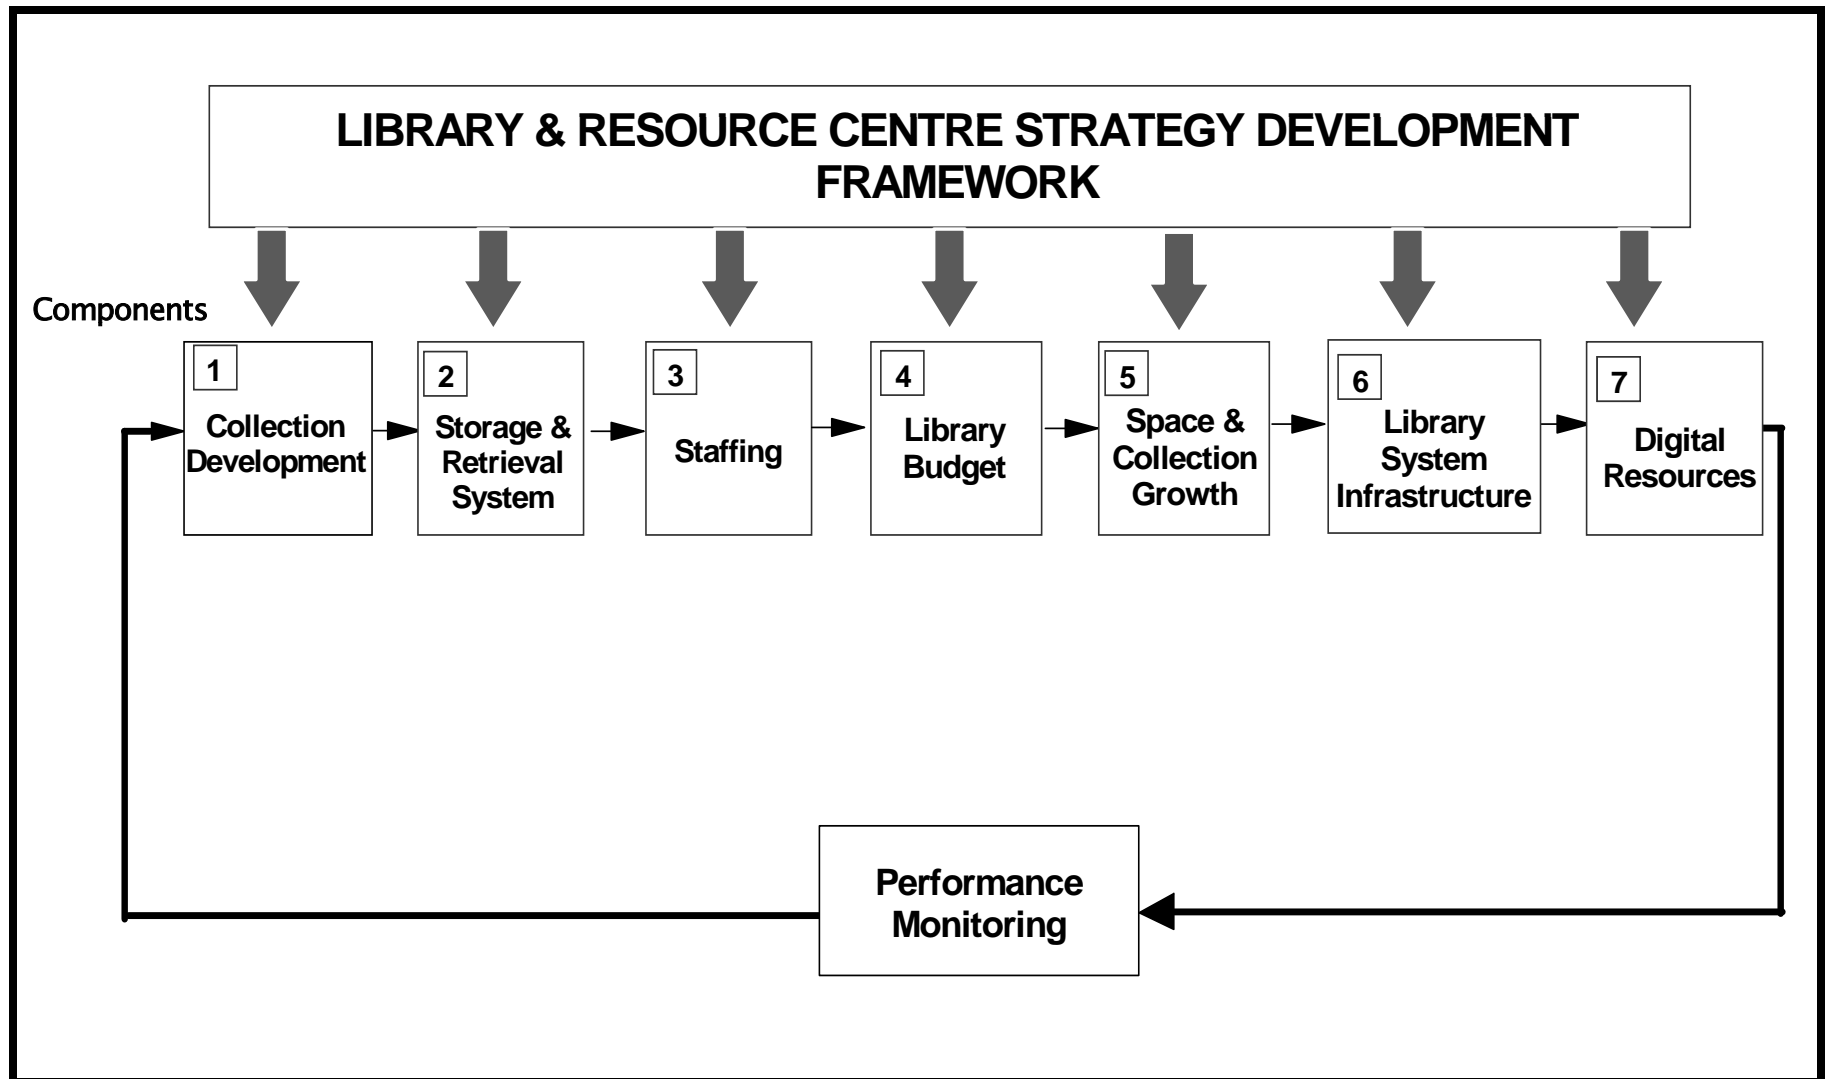

- Substantial accrued experience
- Volume of digital content rising sharply
- How to do it (content, access, preservation) has become more clear
- Some costs have come down (storage, digitization)
- Users are expecting digital
- Digital information is at risk of loss
- Connectivity is largely addressed; time now to address how we use it to achieve Malaysia's objectives

WHAT A DIGITAL STRATEGY CAN SERVE?

Nurturing, managing and leveraging our nation's information assets will support:

- A stronger research environment
- E-learning
- Broadened information access
- Community building
- National identity and pride
- E-democracy
- Public accountability

The National Library of Singapore Launches the Nation's First Searchable Digitised Newspaper Archive

By Lee Siew Kheng Gracie
Librarian
Lee Kong Chian Reference Library, National Library Board, Singapore

In March 2009, the National Library of Singapore (NLS) launched the NewspaperSG (<http://newspapers.nl.sg>), an online service for accessing the library's electronic archives of Singapore and Malaya newspapers. Through the NewspaperSG, library users can now access over 548,000 pages of searchable text from the digitised Straits Times (1845–1982), a local English newspaper, and microfilms of some 200 Singapore and Malaya newspapers that are housed at the Lee Kong Chian Reference Library.

Landing page of NewspaperSG

The full text of the digitised collection of The Straits Times is available for searching, viewing, and printing at the multimedia stations (PC stations) located in our island-wide network of libraries. Users will not be able to download the full-text article remotely but the search results provide access to information, such as the article title, date of publication, and a fifty-word extract, which will help them decide on the relevance of the article before they make a visit to the library to view them.

With a history of nearly 164 years, The Straits Times is a rich primary source of information on Singapore's political, social and cultural life, and history. The digitisation of the paper, which has greatly improved the accessibility of its content to researchers and general users, was made possible through the partnership with the Singapore Press Holdings (SPH), the publisher of The Straits Times. The agreement, made in 2007, allowed the library to digitise issues of the paper since its inception in 1845 right up to 2006 issues. From 2007 onwards, the issues are digitally deposited by the publisher.

In the next phases of the project, the library aims to complete the digitisation of the paper from 1983 to 2006, and to provide remote access to the newspaper.
